While browsing several different artists, Tom Bovo captured my attention. I like how he captivates motion in his photography with a variety of line movement. It's fascinating how movement can explain the fundamentals in a photograph. For instance, what the action means or the significance of the motion. It tells the viewer the story but the viewer can make up their own narrative for the photograph.

What I also admire about his work is that he captures ever day life. He photographs people walking in the streets, city lights, window displays in stores and so forth. He photographs that moment in time and much embrace may contribute to that shot. Therefore, his photos are positive because there is character to him images with that narrative behind it.
